

Printers ordered to front

COMPUTER hardware manufacturer Blazepoint has won a key military order.

The company, based in Chalgrove, has secured a £4.25m contract to supply its rugged printers for the Bowman communications system for the British Army.

The contract has come from lead contractor General Dynamics and agreement has been reached for further work for the project.

Bowman is a digital voice and data communication system for the Army. It will replace 25-year-old systems.

Mr Cooper said: "We believe the printer will become the market leader and standard for defence printer applications."
